“The same song on a different day was a different song”, says Bob Weir, an American singer-songwriter and guitarist, best known as a founding member of the Grateful Dead. “To See a Song” riffs off this notion by challenging artists to visualize the same song. And not to be a Johnny One Note, the show produces five different songs filling Gallery O on H with 34 different works of art.

The Capitol Hill Art League (CHAL), a visual arts program of the Capitol Hill Arts Workshop, challenged its members to create a piece of art, inspired one of five American song classics. 34 artists will present their own interpretations from one of the five chosen songs: My Favorite Things, Body and Soul, On the Road Again, Night & Day, and As Time Goes By.

CHAL artists work in a variety of mediums including sculpture, oil painting, watercolor, multi-media, and photography. For each of the 5 songs six artists exhibit a specially created artwork showing how they connected to the music, and using that inspiration to create their own interpretation of the song. 5 songs – 6 different ways – think of a juke box where the same songs play over and over but each time with a different musician cranking it up!

The artists exhibiting are: Cathy Abramson, Kasse Andrews Weller, Nancy Arbuthnot, Ken Bachman, Kim Bursic, Judith Capan, Sally Canzoneri, Karen Cohen, Marie DeAmicis, Elizabeth Eby, Kay Fuller, Tara Hamilton, Robin Harris, Nicol Hockett, Tamora Ilasat, Vince Iannacchione, Eileen Leahy, Barbara Johnson, Jo Ann Laboy, Dave Mann, Jane Mann, Charles Martin, Mike McSorley, James Molles, Hernan Murno, Rindy OBrien, Joan Owings, Martha Pope, Carolyn Rondthaler, Sandy Tallant, Tati Valle Riestra, Robert Weinstein, Karen Zens.
